U.S. Agency Is Accused Of Trying To Overthrow Turkish Premier's Rule

New York — Yesterday's issue of the weekly Turkish magazine "Akis" published a story reporting that the United States Central Intelligence agency has been trying to bring down the Turkish government and replace Turkish Premier Ismet Inonu by someone "more amenable" to U. S. demands.

The New York Times publishes a dispatch of The Times of London which reported the "Akis" article.

"Akis," edited by Inonu's son-in-law, claims that Gen. Robert Porter, who is now in Ankara, has been sent to Turkey by President Johnson on a secret mission to arrange for a successor to the premier.

The magazine says Porter had a "dramatic interview" in the last few days with General Sunay, Turkish chief of staff, with the apparent implication that the Americans were trying to stage a coup against the Inonu government.

U. S. embassy officials in Ankara said yesterday that Porter, who was on duty in Turkey earlier as the American liaison officer to the Central Treaty organization (CENTO), had returned this week to Ankara, but they were not aware he had been assigned any special duties. They dismissed the Akis story as "nonsense."
